Drishti accepts instructions in all areas of Chambers' practice including commercial law and arbitration, civil liberties and human rights, public law, public international law, sanctions, and competition law.

Recent highlights of Drishti's experience include the following significant cases:

- Commercial Law: a complex civil fraud claim for US$800 million, brought by the Kuwaiti Public Institution for Social Security against its former Director General and other defendants. The case is one of the largest fraud disputes heard in the Commercial Court and previously featured in The Lawyer's Top 20 cases;
- Arbitration: LCIA arbitration proceedings between a company owned by the Indian government and a company owned by the German government, concerning alleged breaches of an LNG supply contract. The claim was settled for $285 million;
- Civil Liberties and Human Rights: challenge to an application for a terrorism notification order under Schedule 4 of the Counter-Terrorism Act 2008;
- Public Law: judicial review to challenge the unlawful delay in re-locating asylum seekers stranded on the island of Diego Garcia for over three years in inhumane conditions;
- Public International Law: claim for an attachment of debt order worth over £20 million against the Republic of Nigeria. The case raises issues of scope of state immunity from enforcement and the requirements for a waiver of immunity;
- Sanctions: appeal to the Court of Justice of the European Union against the General Court's decision to uphold sanctions imposed under the Belarusian sanctions regime in Gutseriev v Council of the European Union;
- Competition Law: the Interchange Fee Claimants v Visa group litigation on the interchange fee applicable to payment card transactions.

Before coming to the Bar, Drishti was a Judicial Assistant at the Court of Appeal to Dame Victoria Sharp, the President of the King's Bench Division, where she worked on a range of appeals including the landmark challenge to the Investigatory Powers Act 2016. Drishti also assisted in teaching public international law at King's College London and for three years assisted Professor Philippa Webb with research on public international law matters, including issues of state and diplomatic immunity and state responsibility.

Drishti studied international relations at King's College London, with a specialism in the Middle East and North Africa and a focus on public international law. Drishti was awarded the top scholarships by the Honourable Society of the Inner Temple to study both the GDL and the Bar Course.
